1 Introduction

The licensing of medical practitioners in England and Wales in the early modern period was exercised by a number of quite separate authorities. A physician in a typical English town, for example, might hold a degree or a licence from one of the universities, or a licence from the College of Physicians of London. More frequently, physicians and surgeons held licences issued by the bishops of England and Wales under the statute of 1511 (3 Henry VIII, c. 11).

According to the Henrician statute of 1511, no physician or surgeon was to practise without first being examined by appropriate practitioners and licensed by the diocesan bishop. This system of episcopal or archiepiscopal control flourished for well over two centuries, but declined as the eighteenth century progressed.

Like other diocesan bishops, the Archbishop of Canterbury issued licences to practise medicine and surgery within his diocese of Canterbury, and information on these purely diocesan licences are mainly to be located in the diocesan records held locally in Canterbury Cathedral Archives.

The Archbishop also granted licences throughout the province of Canterbury, an area which comprised England south of the Humber, and the whole of Wales. These provincial licences, which were issued principally by the Archbishop's Vicar General, might be specific to a single locality or diocese, a number of dioceses, or more often, for the whole of the province of Canterbury. From 1576 until the Restoration, the principal source for information on these provincial licences is to be found in the Archbishops' Registers; thereafter until 1775, the date of the last archiepiscopal licence, the brief entry in the register is supplemented by letters testimonial often signed by two physicians or surgeons, and bearing the fiat of the vicar general to proceed with the licensing. Details of these licences are given in Part 1 of the Directory of Medical Licences issued by the Archbishop of Canterbury 1535-1775 in Lambeth Palace Library.

The Archbishop of Canterbury also issued licences through the Faculty Office. This Office was set up under Peter's Pence Act of 1533 to grant a variety of licences and dispensations previously granted by the Pope; it was a national rather than a provincial organ of administration, and its authority extended throughout England and Wales. To begin with in the mid-sixteenth century, the Faculty Office reflected the papal practice of granting dispensations to the regular and secular clergy to practice medicine or surgery. From the Restoration, the Archbishop through his Master of the Faculties licensed medical practitioners, mainly laymen, not only in his province of Canterbury, but also in the province of York. For the years 1535 to 1547, the Faculty Office Muniment Books provide a record of the medical dispensations. Following the Restoration, the copy of the licence transcribed in the Muniment Books is supplemented by letters testimonial bearing the fiat of the master of the Faculties to issue the licence. Details of these licences are given in Part 2 of the Directory of Medical Licences issued by the Archbishop of Canterbury 1535-1775 in Lambeth Palace Library, covering the years 1535-1547, 1660-1764.
